

THE BROKEN HOME.

"TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION." (CONTINUED) The physician started, as if electrified. "Ah! this is something definite—something decisive," he muttered. "It is confirmed, you say that your daughter was still living."

"The banker turned restlessly on his sofa, and his face grew even paler. "Whatever it is, let it come!" he murmured. "Anything can be borne better than this awful suspense. Let it come!"
